A Study of Poise of the Body.

MORE THAN BALANCE.

INDICATED BY MUSCULAR FLEXIBILITY, CONTROL AND CO-ORDINATION. EXPERIMENT WITH BODY-SIMPLE EXERCISES WHICH TAKE MOST PEOPLE'S CONTROL SHOULD BE MAINLY MENTAL.

BY W. R. C. LATSON, M.D.
(Editor Health Culture Magazine, author "Physical Training as the Basis of Health, Strength and Grace," "Good Value of Mind," "Good Value of Body.")

POISE is not by any means the least important result of a proper physical training. The term poise as used in this connection implies rather more than would be understood by the word balance. Bodily poise is indicated by a peculiar combination of muscular flexibility, control and co-ordination. All the movements are easy, flexible and at the same time direct. Poise is the final result of a proper system of physical training, but is quickly destroyed by the practice of improper exercises. A proper poise of the body requires, first of all, that the body should be erect. As explained in previous articles of this series, the head must be up and back, the chest up-of poise, both physical and mental. In their practice the student should be careful not to make too much exertion, since muscular rigidity is the greatest barrier to poise. The exercises should be performed with all the care possible. The control should be mental rather than physical. What does this mean? Watch a boy walking on a fence. Notice how he flourishes his arms. Then look at the expert rope walker. See how little he moves. The boy's control is physical. The expert rope walker's is mental. The one kicks and struggles to keep his balance. The other has learned the art of poise, which, once learned, gives dignity, grace and freedom to the carriage, whether one be walking on a tight wire or on a ballroom floor.

The following exercises may be practiced at will. They cannot be overdone. They should, however, be practiced in connection with those already given. As to exactly which exercise would be advisable for any particular case, that is, of course, a matter upon which no general statements can be made. All depends upon the strength, endurance and requirements of the student.

Although, strictly speaking, it is outside of our subject, we may remark that in this matter of poise the mental attitude is most important. There can be no true poise of body without poise

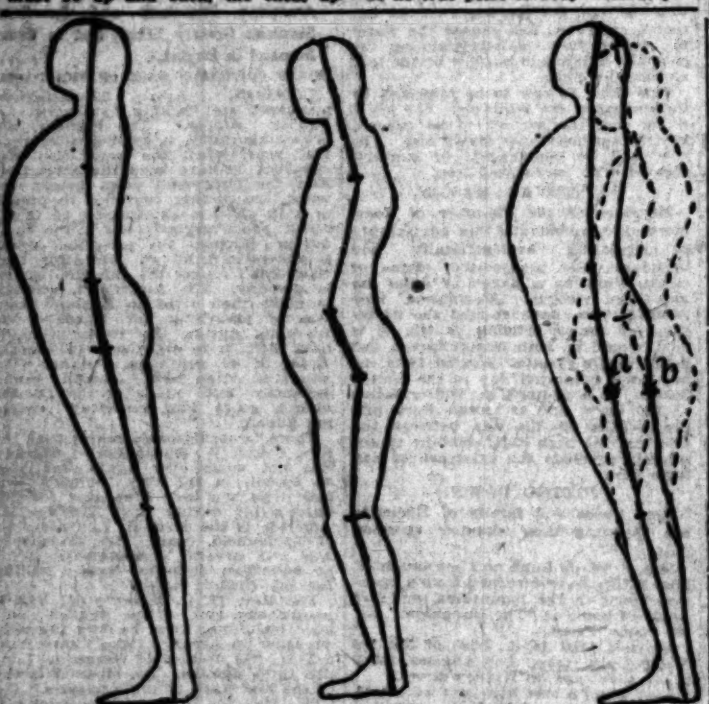

DIAGRAM SHOWING NORMAL (FIG. 1) AND ABNORMAL (FIG. 2) POSTURES OF THE BODY. PELVIS INDICATED BY HEAVY LINE. FIG. 1—A NORMAL POSITION. FIG. 2—ABNORMAL POSITION. FROM WHICH THE LINE IS DRAWN.

And expanded, the shoulders hanging easily and not stiffly drawn back. The lifting of the chest causes a contraction of the abdomen. Then the pelvis must be so carried as to be on a plane with the axis of the body (see Fig. 1) rather than at an angle with it (see Fig. 2). A disposition of the body members means that the body as a whole is a straight line instead of a curved line. The human body constitutes a complex system of bones and joints, to every part of which there is a definite relation. A displacement, however, of any section of the body involves a different relation between the position of the fulcrum, the power or the weight of the lever, and so destroys the poise which nature has produced by a system of natural selection covering countless thousands of years.

POISE A HARD POSSESSION.
But poise means more than merely correct carriage. It means muscular flexibility and coordination. These are necessary to that delicate sense of equilibrium which determines the grace and effectiveness of all motions.

Poie is rare. Most people stand and walk with the head thrown forward, the chest depressed and contracted, the abdomen thrown downward and forward, the pelvis tilted (as shown in figure 2) and the knees slightly bent. For all such it will be necessary to practice the various stretching and elongating movements which have been described in previous articles of this series. These exercises have been especially devised to produce several results, among which is the straightening of the figure. Muscular flexibility and the muscular sense are cultivated by the relaxing exercises, also described in previous articles of this series. The breathing exercises, the "rotary" exercise, and the various movements recommended for the use of the foot and the hand—all these contribute directly to poise.

One of the faults most common to people who lack poise is a side to side movement of the body, waddling or sidling, when attempting to walk. Other faults are equally unsightly (and, alas, equally common) are drooping the head back each step, striking the heels hard against the floor or the pavement when walking, lurching from side to side and general lack of precision and certainty of movement.

EXPERIMENT WITH STREET ARABES.

In former articles we have alluded to the intimate relations between the body and the mental activities. In no respect is this relation, this interdependence, more clearly shown, than by the possession or the lack of poise in any given individual. In a class of forty boys, ranging from 16 to 29 years, organized from the alum contingent by the writer for the purpose of anthropologic investigation, there was not one who could stand, or walk, or breathe correctly. Nay, more, there was not one who could stand or walk still for one minute unless by special effort. Out of forty boys there were just four who by the promise of half a dollar each were induced to stand still for sixty seconds. It may be remarked that, after a stretching and elongating physical and general, covering six hours a week for ten weeks, the percentage of those possessing general muscular control and poise was much increased.

A little observation will convince any one how few people possess poise—how few can walk without swaying, "waddling" or rising and falling of the body; how few can sit or stand still even for a few seconds; how few are easy and direct even in the performance of the simplest every-day acts.

MENTAL VS. PHYSICAL CONTROL.

The exercises given herewith are especially adapted to the development

HAD LOST AN EYE.

Never Knew Until the Oculist Told Him. Not an Uncommon Occurrence.

Thinking he had two fairly good eyes, and laboring under the impression that a little eye treatment and possibly a pair of glasses would correct all his eye defects, a well known Los Angeles gentleman recently visited Dr. Seymour, the oculist, of 400 West Sixth street.

After a careful examination of the patient's eyes Dr. Seymour told him that one of his eyes was practically blind. At first the patient was somewhat indignant and was inclined to accuse the doctor of having destroyed the sight of the eye during the examination. After considerable explanation on the part of the doctor the patient was convinced that this condition had existed for several years.

In alluding to the occurrence, Dr. Seymour said: "Experiences of this kind are quite frequent with all oculists, and if people would only give a little more thought to this, the most creditable about many instances, a little common sense would be a great help. Parents in particular should be more attentive to their children's complaints of their eyes hurting them. By putting a card over each eye in turn and by close questioning parents can quickly learn if either eye is defective or not."

"Where one eye is impaired and the other is perfect, the latter will sooner or later become affected as well if not attended to, for the sympathy that exists between the eyes, is so close that conditions are soon manifested in the good eye."

as it seems, is a most drastic test of muscular control, and in an experience extending over many years the writer has known only two persons who could perform it perfectly.

Exercise No. 1—Stand erect, right foot in advance. Lift left foot, taking a slight step forward, and remain in this position for a few moments.

Exercise No. 3—Stand erect, feet together, arms hanging at the sides. Now inhale breath slowly and gently, and raise the arms straight out at the sides until, when the lungs are fully inflated, the arms should be extended straight out, hands close together, above the head.

Few people can do this exercise without making the movement jerky. Practice on this movement is valuable in several ways. It develops the chest, it straightens the body, and it develops poise.

Exercise No. 4—Sit yourself in an easy chair. Relax all the muscles. Exhale the breath in a gentle sigh. Thereafter exhale and inhale as easily and slowly as possible, save that necessary relaxation and immobility for several minutes.

Exercise No. 5—Lie upon the floor flat on the back. Exhale breath. Relax all the muscles. Lie still without motion or muscular effort, save that necessary relaxation and immobility for several minutes.

Although these exercises seem easy to perform, they are not. They require a quiet mind, a steady nerve, and a person quite the most difficult given in the series. Their careful practice, however, will insure many instances, prominent among which may be mentioned bodily poise, self-command and calmness.

W. R. C. LATSON, M.D.

$100.00 U. S. Bill Given Away

On Thursday, August 12, between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon our representative will be on Spring St. between 1st and 2nd Sts. and will give absolutely free a genuine U. S. $100.00 bill No. 23456789 to the first person (man, woman or child) who asks him the question "Are You the Man with the $100.00 Bill?" There is but one condition and that is the person who asks the question must have in plain sight at the time a copy of the book "Brewster's Millions." The only favor we shall ask of the person will be to give us a signed affidavit with correct name and address for the purpose of sending to the publisher, and also to the credit of any one as to the genuineness of the proposition.

A BOOK WORTH READING

"BREWSTER'S MILLIONS"

A New Novel Which Will Prove Decidedly Popular

"Brewster's Millions" is published by the firm of Herbert A. Stone and Co., of Chicago and the $100.00 bill by them as a method of advertising this book. Let it be absolutely understood that no employee of Manhattan or the Publishing Co. will be allowed to contest. The man who will give the $100.00 bill away is a strong everybody and there will be by no possibility any collusion with any one. Bear in mind that you must have a copy of "Brewster's Millions" in plain sight when you ask the question and to the first person doing so, giving the right man of course, the $100.00 absolutely belongs to you.

"Brewster's Millions" is published to sell at $1.50 but dept. store prices rule with us and the book will be priced at $1.00. Remember the day and place of giving the $100.00 away and that we wish for the goodness of this offer.
